Kit and Jake had sneaked into the backstage area of the sports arena. They had found themselves being roped in to play a match with the youth deaf basketball team. Kit was so nervous that he had shivers spreading through his body.

“What are we going to do?” asked Kit, again. “I don’t know British Sign Language.”

“I do,” smiled Jake. Kit looked puzzled. “My cousin, Eleanor, is deaf. She can lipread now, but we all learnt a bit more sign language to help her out. It was actually really good fun!”

Kit smiled. “Okay, you have to promise to tell me what is going on though,” he said, relaxing a little.

“You have my word,” said Jake. “I’ll teach you a few signs now too and then you can use them if you need to. What words would you like to learn?”

Kit tells Jake some of the words that he would like to learn. Click on Kit and write down the words that he says.

This is a great whiteboard activity. X

Team Talk

The youth deaf basketball team have their team talk before the match. Jake doesn't understand some of what they are signing.

Read the sentences. Write an ea word or one of this week's focus spelling words in the spaces that Jake has left.

This is a great whiteboard activity.

I hope that you
all ate a healthy breakfast this morning.

Greg is ill, so Jake and Kit will play instead.

Any problems, come and talk to me.

Is everyone ready to play?

Keep your

After the team talk, everyone began filing out of the dressing room.
“Good luck!” said Kit.
“Good luck,” Jake signed back.

Sentence Time

There is a notice on the door that leads through to the basketball courts. What does it say?

Health and Safety: Mind your head on the low beams.

Kit, Jake and the rest of the basketball team went out onto the basketball court. "It's healthy to do a warm-up before we start to play," said Jake. "Let's do a few stretches."

Just then, the referee blew her whistle. The teams went to their starting positions and the game began. Kit and Jake were enjoying themselves enormously when, all of a sudden, they heard a voice over the cheering. It was Heather's! “Kit? Jake? What on Earth are you doing on the basketball court?!” she boomed.
