

Apartheid by Charlie Groundwater in Year 1

In South Africa a long time ago, there were some kids at school. They were only allowed to play in groups. The white kids in one group and the black kids in another. The black kids didn't have as good toys or as much money as the white kids and most of the white kids were not nice to them. But some of the white kids did not think it was fair. A man called Nelson Mandela stopped it from being unfair and allowed everyone to play together and to be treated the same. This is because the colour of your skin shouldn't matter, and everyone should be kind.
